

“Hello, it’s { } to meet you.”

First impressions matter.

A new line of personality research (termed “thin-slicing”) suggests that we need only a few seconds to form an accurate judgment about another person.

“The Extraordinary Importance of First Impressions,” Psychology Today

We can help you be... you.

For many of us, being ourselves is a learned skill. But data shows people who make a good first impression are not only more liked, but often more successful.

Psychologists call this the Expressivity Halo: the ability to glow with the best traits of your true personality.

So get your halo on. Sign up for our webinar now.

Of course, you don't want to go too far.
We'll cover that too.
